This story is not fiction.

Every person, place, and event mentioned here is based on real life experiences. These pages reflect true memories, emotions, and moments from my actual journey.

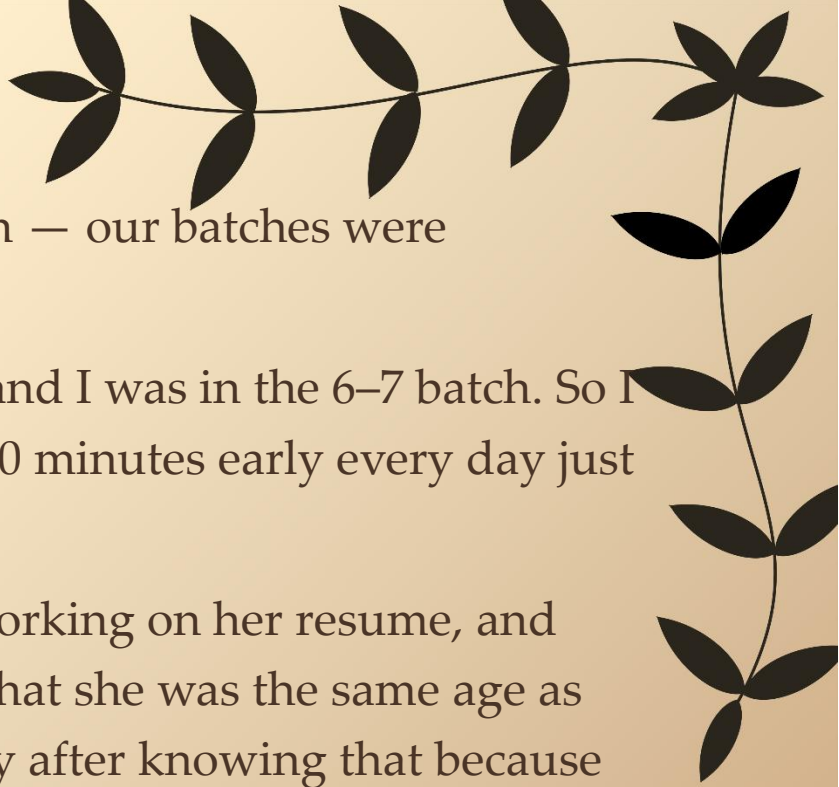

Any resemblance to others is intentional, because this is a lived story — not an imagined one.

So, it all started in the month of July. As usual, I used to go to my computer classes with my friends every day. But on the very first day of July, two new girls joined the class — sisters. That day, I didn't really get a proper look at them.

A few days later, I arrived a little early, and that's when I saw her properly for the first time.

At that moment, I didn't feel anything special. But after a few more days, I ended up sitting beside her, and I started observing her quietly. That day, she was making her resume, and that's how I found out her name.

After that day, I slowly started liking her.

But there was one problem — our batches were different.

She was in the 5–6 batch, and I was in the 6–7 batch. So I started going to class 15–20 minutes early every day just to see her.

One day, she was again working on her resume, and that day I also found out that she was the same age as me. I was genuinely happy after knowing that because she already felt very special to me.

Honestly, I never had much interest in girls of my age. Nobody ever seemed special to me before. I always used to think crushes and love were weird things, and I was never really that type of person.

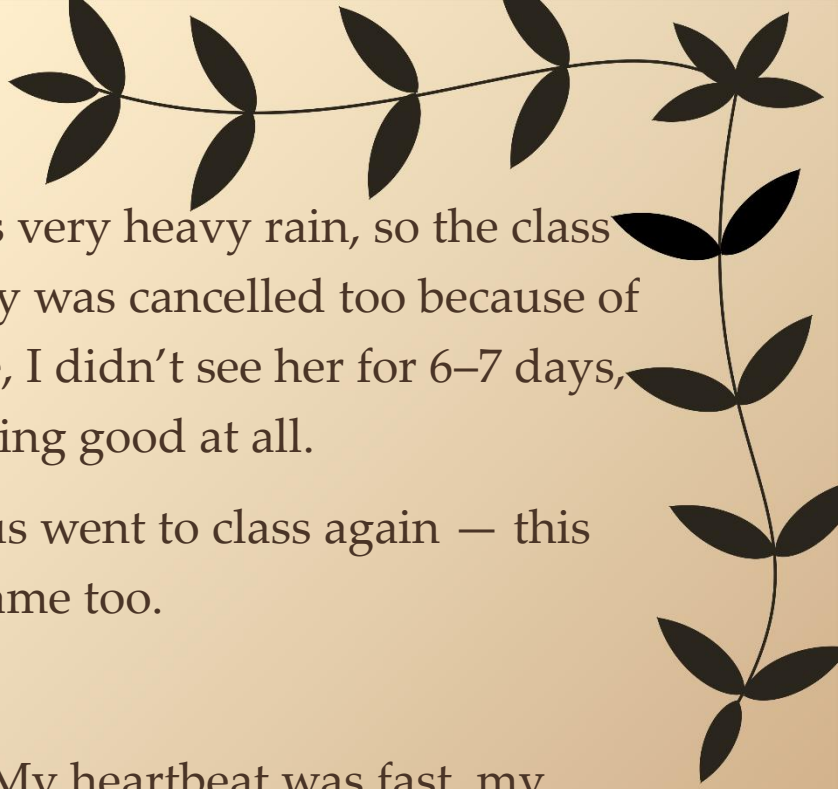

But when I saw her, something changed.

For the first time, someone my age felt truly special to me.

A few days later, I told one of my friends about her, but she thought I was joking and trying to prank her. Then I convinced her that I genuinely liked that girl.

My friend wanted to talk to her, but every time she tried, the girl would leave before anything could happen. This kept happening for many days.

Then the rainy season started.

On 19th August, there was very heavy rain, so the class got cancelled. The next day was cancelled too because of flooding. During that time, I didn't see her for 6–7 days, and honestly, I wasn't feeling good at all.

Then on the 21st, both of us went to class again — this time at 5 PM — and she came too.

I sat beside her.

I was extremely nervous. My heartbeat was fast, my hands were shaking, but still... we couldn't talk.

And on top of that, that day was her last topic of computer basics.

The next day, she didn't come.

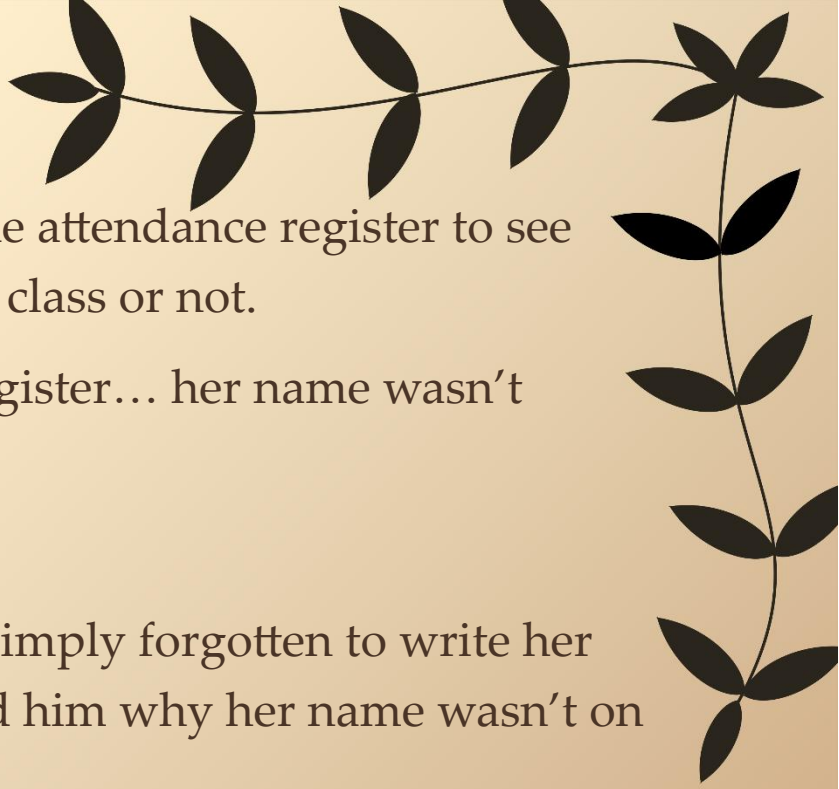

From that moment onwards, I started getting scared, wondering whether she would return or not.

But on Monday, 25th August, she came back and attended her first Tally lecture. I was really happy because I thought she would continue coming regularly.

But maybe fate didn't want to see me happy.

She disappeared again for an entire week.

At first, I thought she was probably busy somewhere. Then September started. On 1st September, I didn't go to class. The next day, when I went there, I suddenly thought about checking the attendance register to see whether she had attended class or not.

But when I checked the register... her name wasn't there.

I got scared.

At first, I thought sir had simply forgotten to write her name, so indirectly I asked him why her name wasn't on the list.

That's when he told me that she had completed her course and probably wouldn't be coming anymore.

I again asked indirectly about her Tally course, but even sir wasn't sure about anything.

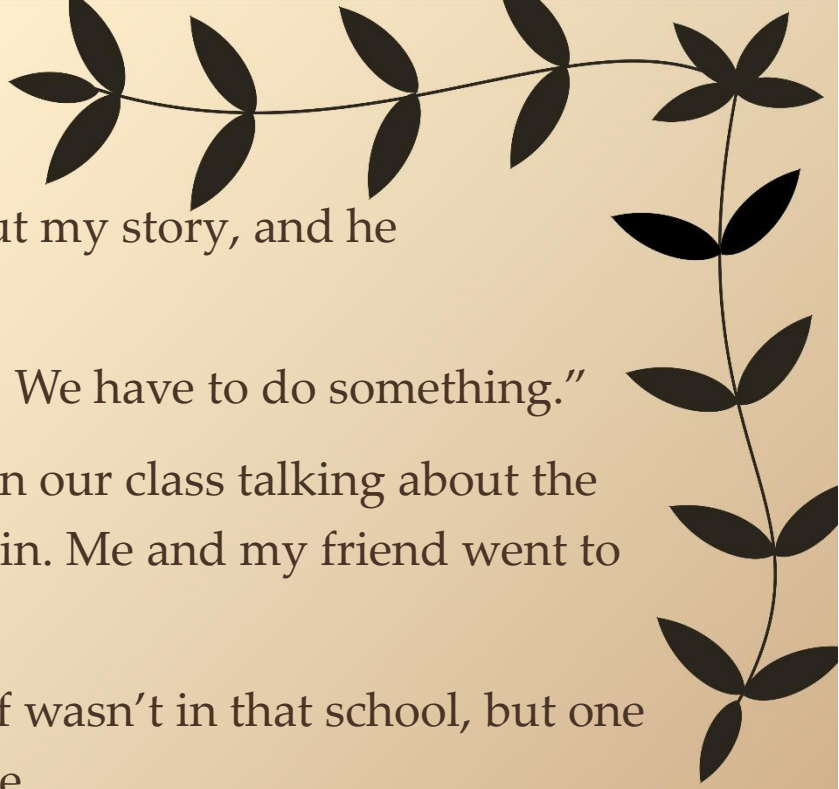

A few days later, my friend also asked sir about her, but even at that time he didn't know whether she would return or not.

That day, all of us felt sad.

It honestly felt like my story had ended before it could even begin.

I slowly started losing hope, but somewhere inside me, I still believed that someday, somehow, a miracle would happen and this story would continue.

And then, after 1 month and 25 days since I had last seen her, I made a new friend.

I told him everything about my story, and he immediately said,

“Bro, this can’t be the end. We have to do something.”

One day, there was a girl in our class talking about the same school SHD studied in. Me and my friend went to talk to her.

She told us that she herself wasn’t in that school, but one of her friends studied there.

So we requested her to ask her friend about SHD.

She agreed.

And after two days, she finally came back with information.

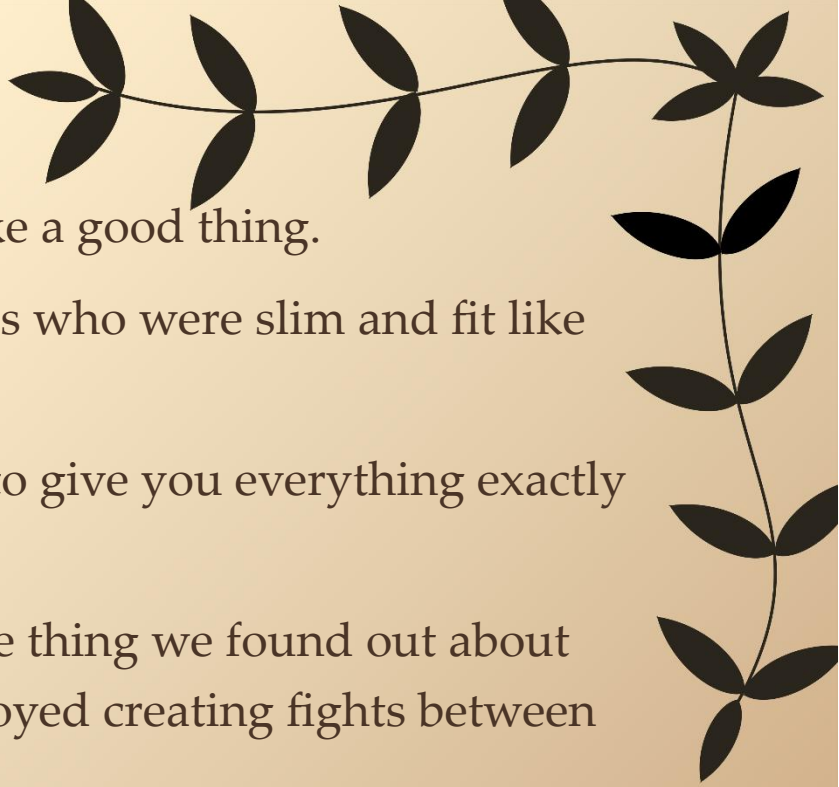

She confirmed that SHD was indeed studying in that school and was in the same class as her friend.

That day, we were genuinely happy.

For the first time in a long while, it felt like maybe this story wasn’t over yet.

After some time, she also told us more things about SHD’s nature and personality. We got to know that if she ever wanted a boyfriend, she wanted someone who had never been in a relationship before.

And honestly, relationship was a very distant thing for me because she was the only girl I had ever truly liked.

So somewhere, that felt like a good thing.

But she also preferred boys who were slim and fit like her.

Still, you can't expect life to give you everything exactly the way you want.

There was also one strange thing we found out about her — apparently, she enjoyed creating fights between couples just for fun.

Even I found that weird, but honestly... what could I even do about it?

A few days later, me and my friends secretly checked the main class register — the one where all the students' information was written.

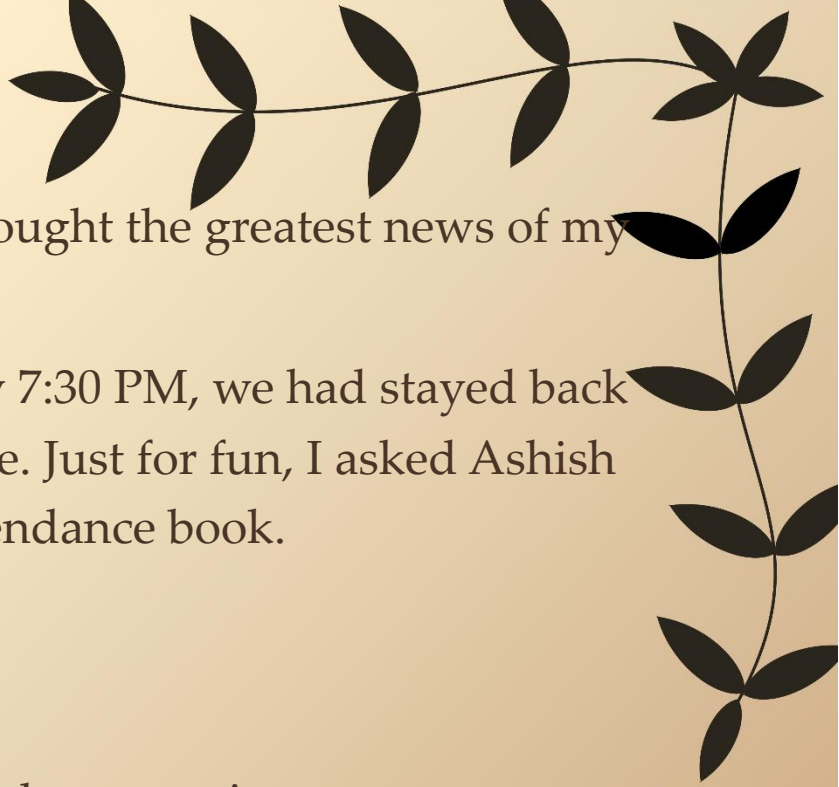

From there, we found her parents' phone number and even her home address.

At one point, we also asked our friend's friend to ask SHD whether she would continue attending computer classes.

SHD replied that her parents wanted her to continue, but she personally didn't want to go anymore.

And from that phone number, we somehow even found one of her Instagram IDs and her Snapchat ID.

Then came Day 140 since I had last seen her.

And honestly, that day brought the greatest news of my life.

Around Day 137, at nearly 7:30 PM, we had stayed back in class for some extra time. Just for fun, I asked Ashish Sir if I could check the attendance book.

And that's when I saw it.

Her name.

She had started attending classes again.

The moment I saw her name written there, I genuinely couldn't control my emotions. My heartbeat became extremely fast, and tears almost came out.

I was so happy that day that I honestly can't describe it properly in words.

Finally, after waiting for 140 days, it felt like my patience was finally going to pay off.

I thought I would finally get to see her again.

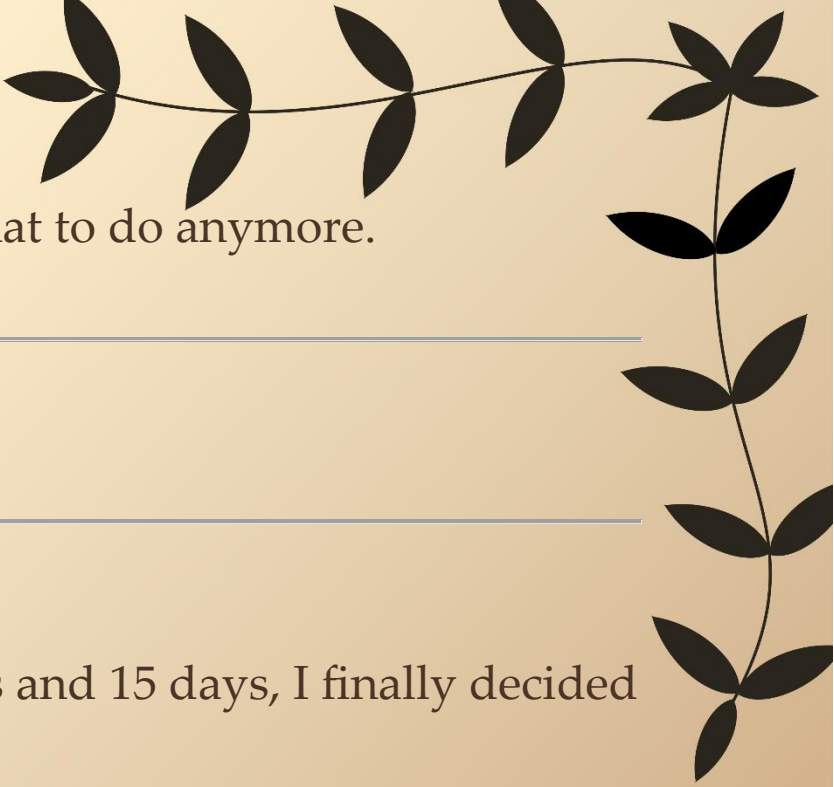

But once again... my bad luck won.

Even after all that, I still couldn't see her.

And now, it had already been 165 days since I last saw her.

At that point, I genuinely felt hopeless.

I was confused, frustrated, and mentally exhausted.

I honestly didn't know what to do anymore.

April 10, 2026

After waiting for 7 months and 15 days, I finally decided to move on from her.

And somehow... I actually did.

Slowly, my mind started fading her memories away. I stopped thinking about her 24/7.

And suddenly, life started feeling peaceful again.

Now, even if someone says her name in front of me, it doesn't affect me anymore.

I FINALLY MOVED ON!!!!!!

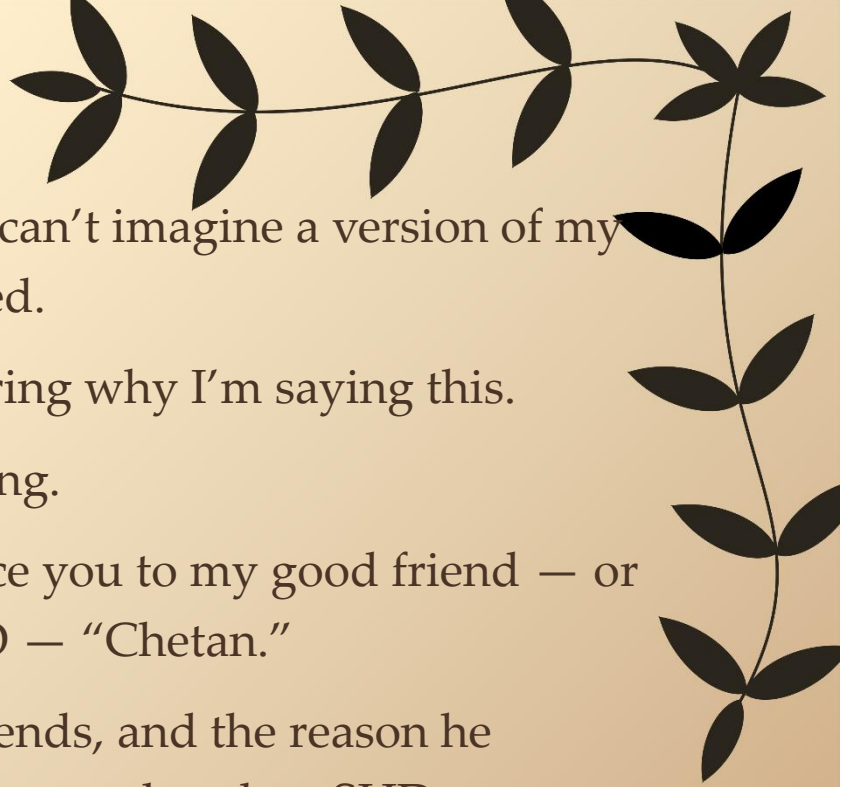

May 11, 2026

I realized something.

People always say,

"Everything Happens For a Reason."

And now I think I finally understand the reason why SHD came into my life.

Because now, I genuinely can't imagine a version of my life where she never existed.

Now you must be wondering why I'm saying this.

So let me explain everything.

First of all, let me introduce you to my good friend — or I should say my BROOOO — “Chetan.”

He is one of my closest friends, and the reason he became my best friend is none other than SHD.

Let me tell you how.

It was just a random day.

I came to class and sat beside Chetan. I already knew him a little, but not much beyond his name.

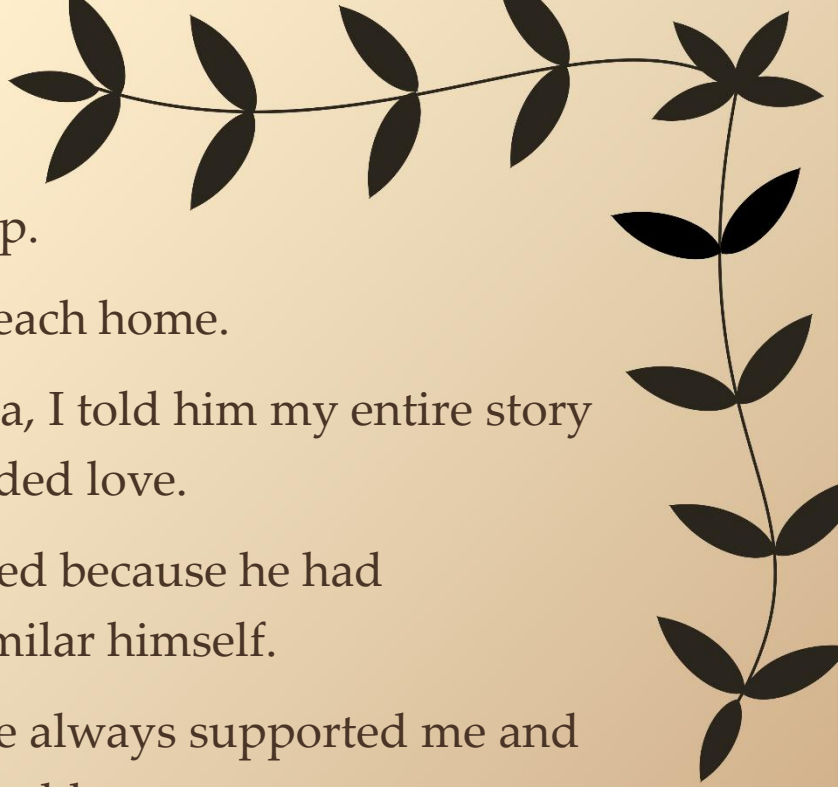

That day, we started talking.

After class ended, we walked outside while continuing our conversation. Then we noticed that it had started raining heavily.

Chetan hadn't brought an umbrella because the rain was unexpected, but I had mine.

At first, we decided to wait and see whether the rain would stop.

During that time, we kept talking about ourselves, our lives, and random things.

But the rain still didn't stop.

So I decided to help him reach home.

While sharing the umbrella, I told him my entire story about SHD and my one-sided love.

He was genuinely interested because he had experienced something similar himself.

From that day onwards, he always supported me and helped me whenever he could.

Even though I never got SHD, it honestly doesn't matter anymore.

Because at least I got a really good friend.

So thank you, brother.

You were there for me whenever I needed someone, and you're still here for me today.

Thank you very much, BROOO.

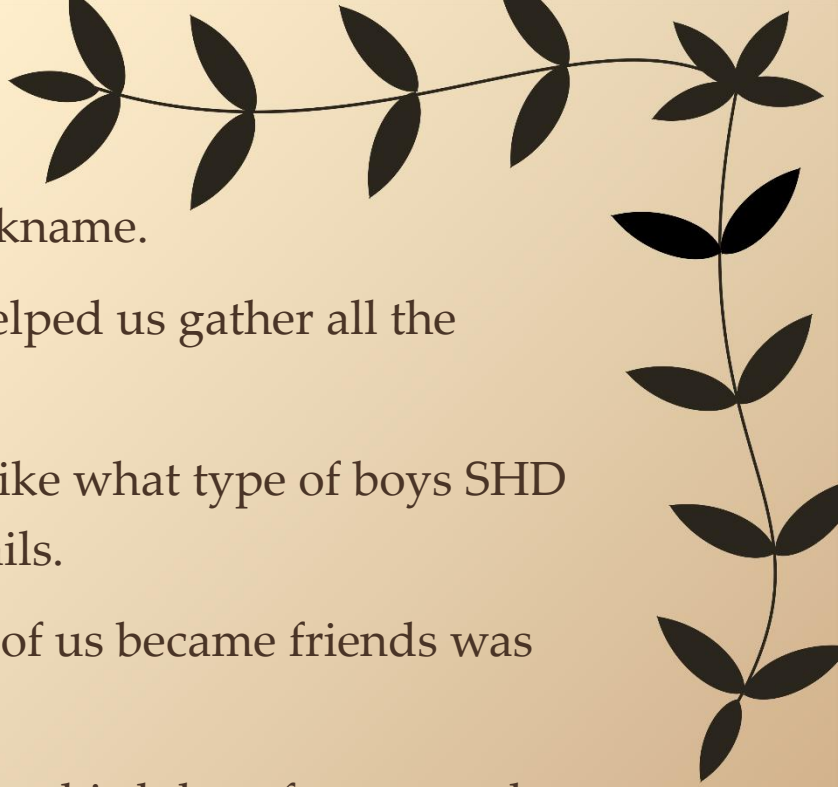

And now you probably understand something.

If SHD had never come into my life, maybe me and Chetan would never have become such close friends.

We probably would have just known each other casually.

But because of her, our friendship became much deeper.

And now, let's talk about our second friend — "Bauna."

Yes, that's actually her nickname.

Bauna was the one who helped us gather all the information about SHD.

She used to tell us things like what type of boys SHD liked and many other details.

Once again, the reason all of us became friends was none other than SHD.

It was around the second or third day after me and Chetan became friends.

We were sitting in class, and Bauna was talking to another girl nearby.

Suddenly, me and Chetan heard her mentioning the same school SHD studied in.

So after class, we went and talked to her.

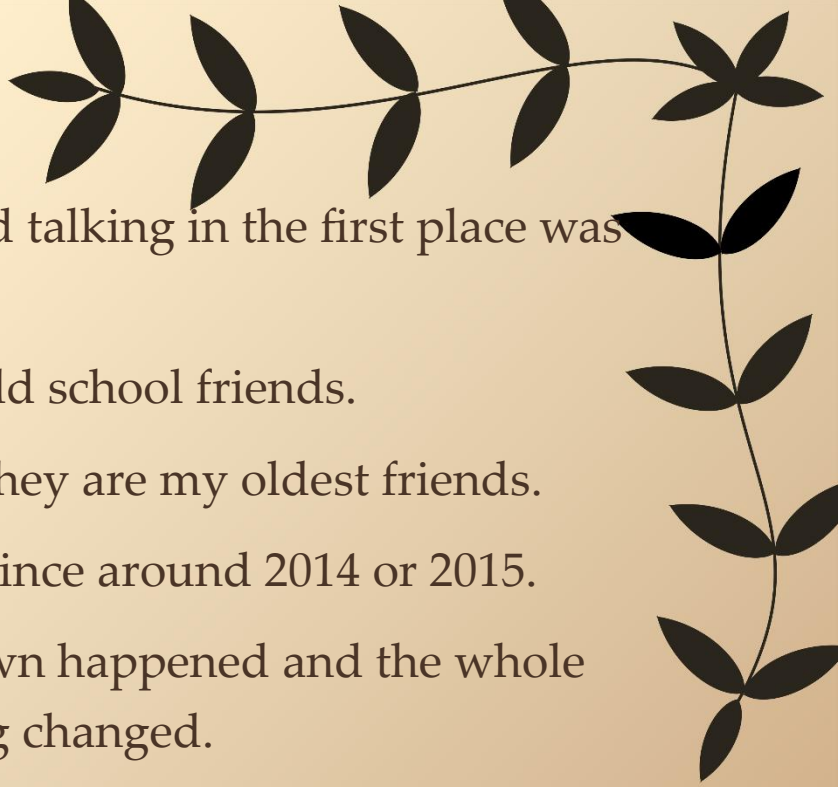

She told us that one of her friends studied in that school.

The next day, she confirmed that SHD was actually there.

After that, Bauna kept helping us more and more, and slowly all of us became really good friends.

And once again, the reason behind everything was SHD.

If SHD had never come into my life, I probably would never have become friends with Chetan and Bauna.

The reason all of us started talking in the first place was because of her.

Now let's talk about my old school friends.

I love them a lot because they are my oldest friends.

We've known each other since around 2014 or 2015.

But in 2020, when lockdown happened and the whole world stopped, everything changed.

After some time, schools started online classes and we all connected again digitally.

But our school building was under renovation, and it was taking a very long time to reopen.

Other schools reopened during late 2021 and early 2022, but our school was still running online.

Eventually, I had to leave that school and join another one.

From that moment onwards, I started missing my old friends a lot.

I couldn't even make many new friends because I was always thinking about my old ones.

From 2023 to 2025, I barely met any of them.

Then came late 2025 — around December.

Somehow, my old friends found my Instagram ID and slowly started following me one by one.

That was the moment I reunited with them.

Honestly, I was extremely happy.

For some time, I completely forgot about SHD because I was finally talking to my old friends again after 4–5 years.

We started sharing our lives again, sending reels, talking daily, laughing, and having fun.

And yes... I even told them about SHD too.

Now, every day feels happier because I always have someone to talk to.

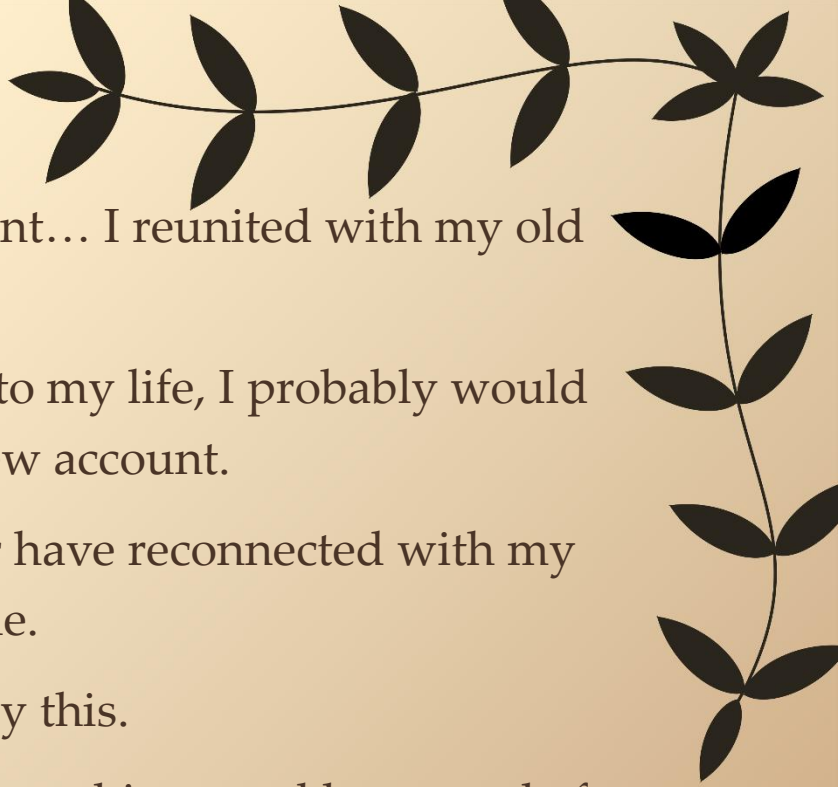

But the funny thing is — the reason I reunited with my old friends was also indirectly because of SHD.

My friends found my current Instagram account because it had my real name on it.

Before that, I never liked using my real name online. I used my channel name instead, and honestly, nobody could recognize me from that account.

But after SHD stopped attending classes, me and Chetan used to discuss the situation a lot.

That's when I decided to create a new Instagram account using my real name.

And because of that account... I reunited with my old friends.

If SHD had never come into my life, I probably would never have created that new account.

And maybe I would never have reconnected with my old friends at the right time.

And now, I just want to say this.

Earlier, I used to think that nothing good happened after SHD came into my life.

But now, after understanding everything properly, I realize how much she unknowingly changed my life.

If she had never entered my life, none of these things would have happened.

I wouldn't have found two amazing new friends.

I wouldn't have reunited with my old friends.

And maybe I wouldn't have been this happy today.

Even though I never got her, I no longer regret it.

Because whatever happened... maybe it happened for a reason.

Maybe this was the reason she came into my life.

And that's why I simply want to thank her.

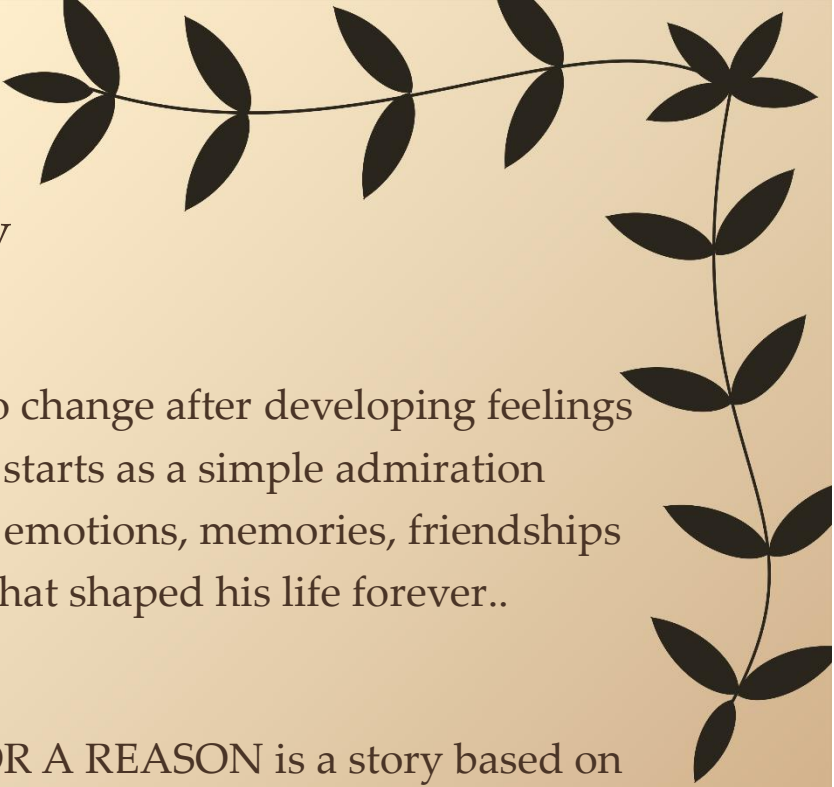

And at last, I just want to say this:

“EVERYTHING HAPPENS FOR A REASON”

-X-X- THE END -X-X-
